

Document title.

One line that tells the reader
what this document gives them.

Type a question

Where do I find the example policy?

A sample answer in one or two short sentences. It shows how a reply reads, with its source underneath.

Example policy · Document

 A question about a policy?

 A question about a time or place?

 A question about who to ask?

 A request to find a document

 A question about an example document?

 A request for a short summary

SECTION LABEL

A section headline that states one benefit

An opening paragraph of four or five lines. Say what the product does for the reader in plain language, written to them as you. Name the problem it solves before the way it solves it. Keep to one idea, and leave the detail and any caveats for the two columns below.

First column of supporting detail, about sixty words. Explain where answers come from and what the product does not do. Keep sentences short and concrete, and use the words the reader uses for their own work rather than product names.

Second column, about the same length. Answer the question a careful reader asks next, such as privacy or permissions. Only state what has an approved public source, and point to that source in the finished document.

Example conversation

What does the example policy cover?

A one-line lead-in to the answer:Example policy

PDF · Example team · Updated date

1. First point, taken from the document.
2. Second point, in the reader's words.
3. Third point, with the detail that matters.
4. Fourth point, and what to do next.

A suggested follow-up question goes here.

HOW IT WORKS

A headline that sums up how it works

Two or three sentences on where the reader finds it and what they do first. Describe it in the reader's own terms. List the steps below in the order the reader follows them.

01 First step

One or two lines on what the person does.
Name the action, not the feature.

02 Second step

One or two lines on what happens next, from the reader's side of the screen.

03 Third step

One or two lines. Keep each step to a single idea.

04 Fourth step

One or two lines on the result the person gets and how they check it.

 Assistant Help

Good morning, Sam

A question, typed in everyday words

Callout in a few words

A suggested question

Another suggestion

BEFORE AND AFTER

A headline that names the change in a few words

One sentence on how it works today. One sentence on how it works afterwards.

A closing line that says what the diagram means for the reader. Keep it to one or two sentences.

SECTION LABEL

A headline for five short points

One or two sentences that frame the list below. Say why these points matter to this reader, then let each row make one point.

First point, as a short statement

Two lines of supporting detail. Explain what it means for the reader in practice, and only state what has an approved public source.

Second point

Supporting detail in one or two sentences. Lead with the outcome, then give the reason it holds and any limit the reader should know about. A row like this one may run to three lines; if it needs more, split the point in two.

Third point

Supporting detail in one or two sentences. Say what the reader can check for themselves and where to find it, so the point does not rest on this document alone.

Fourth point, with tag pills

Use tag pills for short labels such as the standards a reader will look for.

Standard one

Standard two

Standard three

Standard four

Fifth point

Supporting detail in one or two sentences. End the list on the point that hands control to the reader. Say who makes the choice, when it can change and where the reader goes to change it. Close on the reader's next step.

SECTION LABEL

Feature overview

One or two sentences that introduce the features on this page. Say what they share, so each feature adds one thing.

First feature, as one benefit

Feature tag

One or two lines on what the person does and what they get back. Name the action first, then the result.

SECTION LABEL, CONTINUED

Feature tag

Second feature, as one benefit

One or two lines on what the person does and what they get back.

Third feature, as one benefit

Feature tag

One line on what the person does and what they get back.

SUMMARY

A headline that sums up the whole document

Bring the earlier pages together in a sentence or two, without repeating any line word for word.

TODAY

- × How the first task works today, in one line.
- × How the second task works today.
- × How the third task works today.
- × How the fourth task works today.

WITH THE PRODUCT

- ✓ How the same task works with the product.
- ✓ How it works with the product.
- ✓ How it works with the product.
- ✓ How it works with the product.

One sentence that points to the next step. The closing page says who to talk to.

A closing statement that sums up the document in one line.

One sentence on what happens next and who the reader should talk to.

Call to action